CONVENTION OPENS IN THIS CITY

Forty-Fourth Convention of Grand Lodge of Knights of Pythias and Pythian Sisters Being Held at Freeman's Hall--Large Delegation Present.

The forty-fourth convention of the Grand Lodge of Knights of Pythias, an' the Pythian Sisters opened in this city at ten o'clock this morning at Freeman's Hall, and at least 600 delegates were present in the two conventions. It is the first time a state convention has been held here for years and everything will be done, to make the delegates wish to come back soon.

The delegates began to arrive on Monday forenoon and they came in large numbers and by last evening there were over five hundred present and they filled the hotel. The Rockingham hotel is the headquarters and here the grand officers and the special guests are quartered.

The meetings will be held in Freeman's big hall and both the two upper halls will also be used. Damon Lodge No. 9, is the host and they have been making ready for some weeks, so that every arrangement had been perfected and the delegates were taken care of without a hitch. In addition to the convention program the local knights have planned considerable entertain-

GEN. VILLA NOW FEARS BIG REVOLT

10,000 Men Already in Mutiny at Torreón.

Juarez, Mex., Oct. 5.—With 10,000 of his men already in revolt and discontent among his generals growing, General Francisco Villa hurriedly returned today to Torreón, to put an end to a more general mutiny, which is threatened in the northern army. The loss of the Herrera army of nearly 5000 and of the Arrieta forces in Durango, numbering nearly 3000 more, annoyed Villa, but he became alarmed today when General Manuel Chao, commanding a detachment of 2500 Villa troops, deserted with his men.

General Chao's action, following that of General Herrera and General Arrieta, causes Villa and his friends to fear a general revolt in his army, which may menace his cause in northern Mexico and give Carranza an advantage which will be difficult to overcome. Chao formerly was military governor of Chihuahua.

For days there has been discontent among a certain element of Villa's army, mostly among the generals with whom Villa previously had quarreled. Thus far none of the generals who were with him in the beginning of his campaign has shown a disposition to desert him.

General Villa has notified his generals that he will permit none of them to attend any further peace conferences called by Carranza or his sympathizers. From a Villa standpoint there is no longer the slightest chance to avoid war with Carranza and his representatives say no further concessions will be given by Villa to the cause of peace.

Germans Have Made a Dent in Allies Centre

Terrific Fighting Continues

BOTH SIDES STRUGGLING TO RETAIN OFFENSIVE (Special to The Herald)

Paris, Oct. 6.—The vigorous offensive movements of the German right flank under General von Kluck, has compelled the allies to send reinforcements to their left wing. It is reported that a part of the British force, probably the Indian troops, has been sent to strengthen the allies' left wing, extending from Roye to Douai.

The fighting along the mighty battlefield has taken on a new intensity, with both sides striving to hold the offensive, notably in the northwestern end where the French counter attacks were repulsed by the Germans, and the advanced lines of the French compelled to fall back about five miles.

GERMANY CALLS UPON RESERVES (Special to The Herald)

London, Oct. 6.—A Copenhagen dispatch states that the German Landsturm for 1886 has been called out, together with all the subjects who have attained the age of 45 since the war broke out.

The dispatch quotes a Berlin Socialist paper which says: "Want, despite all assistance, has reached an alarming extent, and the masses of unemployed in Germany are growing monthly."

GERMANS STORMING ANTWERP (Special to The Herald)

Antwerp, Oct. 5.—The German troops are storming the defenses at Antwerp. The attacks began yesterday after the siege guns of the Germans had battered away at the forts for four days, and the fighting continued throughout the night.

A statement issued today at the War Office states that the attacks of the Germans have been repulsed at all points.

ITALY TO ENTER WAR SOON (Special to The Herald)

Rome, Oct. 6.—Italian newspapers here declare that the prospective changes in the cabinet have made it certain that Italy will soon declare war against Austria.

The editorials of the various papers demand that this country immediately throw off the bonds of triple alliance, and this feeling is growing in strength daily.

SITUATION OF GERMAN ARMY HOPEFUL (Special to The Herald)

Berlin, via wireless to Bayville, L. I., Oct. 6.—In an official statement issued this afternoon it was declared that the situation of the German and Austrian armies everywhere is most hopeful.

BATTLE FRONT IS EXTENDED (Special to The Herald)

Paris, Oct. 6.—The battle front on the right flank of the German army, where the allied British and French troops are poing away with unceasing attacks is steadily becoming greater, according to an official statement issued here at three o'clock this afternoon. It is extending toward the north and northwest. Large masses of German cavalry have been repulsed at Lille, says the statement. Lille is only ten miles from the Belgian border. The appearance of the large cavalry force there indicates that the Germans, too, are engaged in a counter attacking movement in which they hope to turn the allies back.

SHIP IN N. Y. HARBOR IS FIRED UPON

New York, Oct. 6.—A shot from a British cruiser believed to be the Britannia, was fired across the bow of the steamer Kalle, a Norwegian banana carrier, off Cootland lightship today, when the Kalle was within the three-mile limit. The action of the initiative, 25¢ at all stores.

SECRETARY DANIELS TO SPEAK IN PORTSMOUTH

This will be his second visit to Portsmouth, the former being on the occasion of a reception and banquet by the Board of Trade.

EAT LESS MEAT IF BACK HURTS

Take a glass of Salts to flush kidneys if bladder bothers you.

Eating meat regularly eventually produces kidney trouble in some form or other, says a well-known authority, because the uric acid in meat excites the kidneys, they become overworked; get sluggish; clog up and cause all sorts of distress, particularly backache and misery in the kidney region; rheumatic twinges, severe headaches, acid stomach, constipation, torpid liver, sleeplessness, bladder and urinary irritation.

The moment your back hurts or kidneys aren't acting right, or if bladder bothers you, get about four ounces of Jad Salts from any good pharmacy; take a tablespoonful in a glass of water before breakfast for a few days and your kidneys will then act fine. "This famous salt is made from the acid of grapes and lemon juice, combined with bicarbonate, and has been used for generations to flush clogged kidneys and stimulate them to normal activity; also to neutralize the acids in the urine so it no longer irritates, thus ending bladder disorders.

Jad Salts cannot injure anyone; makes a delightful effervescent lithia-water drink which millions of men and women take now and then to keep the kidneys and urinary organs clean, thus avoiding serious kidney disease.

A WEEK OF WAR ON $8.75.

London, Oct. 6.—Returned travelers from the Continent say that traveling there is cheaper than before the war. One artist who has just come back from France, told how he started out with $10 and returned home with 1.25 after spending a week in the war zone. His week's travel cost him just $8.75. He said:

"I have just spent a week in France and Belgium, have traveled scores of miles on foot and by rail, and when a day ago, I got on the boat at Ostend with a jealously-guarded return ticket, I still had $1.25 remaining from the $10 which represented my financial resources when I landed on French soil. Touring on the Continent just now seems to be cheaper than in times of peace, thanks mainly to the delightful disregard of French and Belgian railway officials for such mundane things as fares or tickets.

"Eight days ago I found myself in Boulogne a stranger in a strange land, and with no idea of the language.

Boulogne was like Glasgow on a Sunday. I tried to get through to Paris, but it was impossible, so I made up my mind for Ostend. Gendarmes of Philip patrols were told me. Railway fares were out of the question. I had not then thought of the possibility of free rides, so I set out to walk.

"A day's tramp saw me at Calais. Three times I was stopped by French soldiers. The only French word I knew was 'Anglais,' but that was enough. 'Anglais' I said, and waved my much-thumbed passport with all the assurance of a tourist with a Baedeker. It had a magical effect. Smiles, salutes and good wishes replaced the fearful challenges of a moment before.

"The early success of 'Anglais' brought inspiration at Calais. It was the same there. Gendarmes, station-master, ticket collector, booking clerk, waiter and smiled at the magic word. No one dreamt of my paying for a ticket to Dunkirk.

"But having boarded the train, I thought my luck had turned. The ticket collector followed me into the compartment and settled himself as for a journey. Violent of arrest rose up, born perhaps of a guilty recollection of having once travelled from the Mansion House to Charing Cross without a ticket at a moment of extreme financial stress. But in the compartment was a French boy who could speak English, and it appeared that the stationmaster fearful for my comfort and safety had instructed the collector to accompany me as a sort of guardian to see me safely past the officials at Dunkirk. He did so, and took me to a hotel where they could talk of nothing else but the prowess of the British soldiers and where they waved away all suggestion of a bill with enthusiastic repetitions of the word that up till now had stood me in such good stead—'Anglais.'

"In two days after leaving Boulogne with dread tales ringing in my ears of what would happen to me on the way, I had arrived at Ostend without having paid two cents in fares and only a few cents for food.

"In this roundabout route to Ostend I encountered many little kindnesses, but the limit was reached when a porter offered me a frame. It was probably all the money he possessed, but he thought by my gestures that I was 'broke.'

"But although I have spent seven days in France and Belgium at a cost (apart from the boat passage) of 35¢ I have come back with an uncomfortable feeling that I have hardly had my money's worth. Not one German have I seen.

"In the seven days, however, I have seen sights and heard tales thrilling and glorious that the years will never efface. I shall never forget, for instance, how, one morning in Boulogne, I saw coming towards me a little group of seven men, clothed in rags, faces smeared with dust and grime, rusty-red blotches showing dully here and there, grim reminders of such things as whistling bullets and flying fragments of shell. One of them asked me to direct them to the British Consul. When I replied to them in words that still have a lingering trace of Midland accent they were almost overcome with joy.

"They were British soldiers, not as we know them, decked out in the fine trappings of the parade-ground, spick, span, and shaven. They had been at the great battle of Mons, and the nine days of walking and hairbreadth escapes that had followed their having been cut off from their regiment had left their mark.

"French peasants, they told me had given them clothes and buried their uniforms. The pictures they presented was a cameo of tragedy, but there was the inevitable comic relief. One great giant of a fellow, 6 ft. 3 in. in height, had been given a pair of trousers that reached only an inch or two below his knees. 'Bonne, mate,' he said with a rueful glance at his partially covered legs, 'I never thought I was comin' out 'ere to be turned into a bloomin' boy scout!'

"They had had a terrible time. They had been, they said, in the trenches at Mons. The German artillery had got the range almost immediately. 'The blessed shells' said one 'were screaming like yell like anything you ever heard before. All we could do was to keep on firing. Our officer stood up in the trenches and clapped his hands like as if he was clapping a star turn at the Empire. 'Good boys' he yelled. 'Good boys, stick to it! That was all he said. The next moment a piece of shell had crumpled him up. The next in command ordered us to retreat and we pelted back.

"On the way we passed a deserted Maxim. There was a Lancashire chap there who knew how to work it. '35 long boys' he shouted, and made a dive for the gun. In a few moments I looked back. There he was pumping lead into the mass of 'em, laughing for all he was worth and yelling anti-

"Look at 'em droppin' boys. Look at 'em droppin'! That was the last I saw of him.

"At Ostend I fell in with nine more stragglers. One of them was a brawny Yorkshireman. His chief grievance was that he hadn't been able to write and tell his wife where he was and how he was getting on. 'Tha' sees, lad,' he remarked in perfect seriousness, 'th' missus knows that now and then I drink one or two more glasses than's good for me, and she'll be gettin' anxious.' A few days before he had been in a terrifically bad engagement, yet the only thing that worried him was the fear that the 'missus' might be anxious about what he called the teetotal lay."

BANK PAYS BIG PRICE FOR A LOT

In the most sensational auction sale in the history of Manchester, a lot of land, without buildings, on the site of the burned Merchants National bank, was sold Monday afternoon by Gen. Henry B. Fairbanks, for $55 per square foot, the highest price that was ever reached or probably will be in the history of real estate transactions in New Hampshire. There being 3500 square feet of land in the sale, the total price paid for this small tract is $225,500.

The bidding was sensational. Nothing like it was ever known and the great throng present felt the tension of the situation as the price soared to figures never dreamed of in New Hampshire, and which is as high as property has sold in the big business section of Boston.

The lot was purchased by Judge N. P. Hunt, acting for the Board of Directors of the Merchants National Bank, who were two third owners in the property, while the property was bid up by H. N. Bond who acted for W. E. Quinn of the Barton Company, who owned one third. The Bank will erect a new building at once.

NEW WIRELESS AT PANAMA READY

Washington, Oct. 5.—At a cost of a quarter of a million dollars, the navy department has just completed at Darien, on the Isthmus of Panama, the second station of a chain of wireless towers expected to maintain communication between the great Arlington station, Central America, California, China, Hawaii, Samoa, Guam and the Philippines.

This new tower is composed of three 600-foot structures, forming a triangle on a 300-foot base. The other links of the chain will rapidly be completed as soon as the necessary fortification can be constructed to defend them against attack.

STOLE COATS BUT HAD SHORT LIBERTY

Arthur Jones, aged 30, claiming to be a native of this city, was arrested Monday evening by Officer Anderson charged with breaking and entering. It is alleged that between seven and eight o'clock Jones entered the house of Andrew Callaghan on Linden street using a key, and stole several coats, which he later disposed of at a second hand store on Market street. The break was discovered some time later and Jones was picked up.

The sewer crew of the Board of Public Works commenced work on Monday on the sewer for Porter and Court street. It will enter the Government sewer at the corner of State and Pleasant streets and the twenty-inch pipe will be laid nine feet deep.

FIERCEST BATTLE OF WORLDS HISTORY RAGES

Paris, Oct. 5.—The German offensive against the allied left wing continues with increasing violence. This was the significant statement which overshadowed all else in the 2 o'clock official communique. And it also stated, without equivocation, that the result of this terrible battle continues in doubt.

That this should be so is not surprising. The Germans continue to drain their other fighting units to pour reinforcements into the lines of Gen. von Boehm and von Kluck. They are fighting here to keep their offensive alive. When they are forced to retreat—and every military official here from Gen. Gallieni down declares that they eventually must give way or be annihilated—they will have to retire entirely from France.

The allies have been obliged to give ground at certain points on the western side of the battle line.

Both Strongly Intrenched The Argonne has witnessed no change for more than a week. Here both armies remain in strong intrenchments, their fate depending on the battles in the west and east. The army of the crown prince is still being pressed backward in the Woivre region, while the French columns advancing from Toul and Nancy have forced the Germans to lift their siege of certain of the Meuse forts.

All officials here today united in characterizing the general situation as satisfactory. The allied armies at the front are constantly being augmented, while it is certain, judging from wireless messages intercepted by the field forces, that for the present at least the Germans are at the end of their resources.

Forced to Weaken Army

They have been compelled to send so many troops to the east to hold the Russians that there are at present no additional troops to re-inforce the western fighting lines of Gen. von Boehm and von Kluck, which have already been given every possible soldier that could be spared from the centre and from Alsace-Lorraine, where proceedings are at a standstill.

Germans Avert Peril

The Germans have, for the time being, lifted the danger to their line of communication. They have driven the allies back at the points where they had striven desperately to reach the railway line over which the German re-inforcements and supplies are rushed. This line, extending north-east from Compiegne, through Tergast, St. Quentin, Mauberge and Liege, to the German army centres at Aix-la-Chapelle and Cologne, is the German's main artery in their present campaign.

If the allies could have cut it they would have delivered a deathblow to von Kluck and von Boehm. But they have been forced back in the neighborhood of St. Quentin and from there south to the beginning of the "fish hook" curve of the German line.

The allies, however, have had one advantage in their movement, which still remains with them and which is adding in the general turning movement. This is the railroad line which parallels that held by the Germans and extending from Amiens to Arras, at which point it turns to the east and finally pierces the German line at Valenciennes and Mons. The extreme French left is operating along this line in the direction of the last two named points.

FRENCH GIVE WAY

London, Oct. 5.—There is no appreciable sign of a let up in the ferocity of the fighting in the west of France. The Germans continue their desperate attempts to isolate the northern army of Gen. D'Amade and have forced the French to give way at several points on the battle line.

It is declared by military experts here, however, that this action in no way means any general retrogression by the French left. Simply at certain points the advanced line has been trampled and has withdrawn to the base trenches, where, under the support of their heavy artillery, the units can hold the Germans in check.

That the Germans realize how important to the spirit of the entire army is the holding of their present line is shown and also by the extraordinary measures to re-inforce. Thousands of men have been withdrawn from the centre and from the left to strengthen the right. They are utilizing these fresh levies in a series of assaults of the most ferocious character. The reports, the military leaders here say, probing, but will not change the inevitable outcome of the battle marked up by the allies as a victory for their cause.

Territorials in Line

All of the British re-enforcements, including the Indian and Colonial troops, excepting probably the Canadians, are reported to be on the battle line. There is still considerable mystery regarding the disposition of the British forces. Early in the war it was reported they would proceed direct to the continent. Lately a rumor has been circulated they would be sent to Aldershot to complete their training. Whatever they are, the government is withholding information regarding them.

Railways Faster in Battle

The correspondent of the Times at Bordeaux, commenting on the battle in northern France, says:

"The time has not yet come to reveal the composition of the allies left, which is now striking up toward the Belgian frontier, but when the veil hiding the movement in the neighbor-be seen what a potent factor the French railway service has been in the battles of northern France."

The fact that fighting is in progress in and around the town of Douai, mid way between Arras and Valenciennes, on the railroad to Mons, is taken in London to show how surely the allies in northern France have pushed the forward movement they hope will envelop Gen. von Kluck, the commander of the German right wing, in a net of steel.

Can't Find Weak Link For the past week the Germans, so far as can be ascertained from the few facts known in London, have been mainly hurling themselves against different points in the allies line in an effort to discover a weak link in the chain. At the present time, in the view of Gen. Joffre, commander-in-chief of the French forces, the process of attrition has gone far enough to justify the resumption of offensive movements on the part of the allies, as is announced in the latest communication from French headquarters.

Apparently the intent now is to attempt something decisive against the German right wing, and if possible bring to an end this contest, which for magnitude and stubbornness is without precedent in history. The series of highlands stretching north and south along the allied left and the master keys of the battle, and a considerable force from Arras, and elsewhere has been pushed up to secure control of them.

ARMORED MOTORS BILL SOON To enable the United States to profit by the European war, Representative Daniel R. Anthony, Jr., of Kansas, member of the House Committee on Military Affairs, will introduce in the House at the next session a bill to have the United States army adopt and purchase armored automobiles as a regular arm of the military service.

Mr. Anthony said yesterday: "To my mind, there can be no doubt that any up-to-date army must be equipped with armored automobiles. The things that have been accomplished through their use by both the Germans and the Allies have demonstrated that, as engines of modern warfare, they are indispensable. This is strikingly so in connection with all cavalry movements. Nobody can question the advantage of having fast-moving vehicles which can carry fighting men and keep them impregnable to rifle fire."

Local Self-Government Best.

Whether federal regulation and control of practically all things requiring regulation and control is desirable is a question in the minds of many, but that the country is rapidly drifting toward that condition is beyond question. More and more are the people looking to the federal government to assume responsibilities that formerly rested upon the states, and so far as this course is taken are affairs removed beyond local management and control. Possibly this may be a good thing, but it is to be feared the time may come when it will not be so considered, and that it will be more difficult to return to original conditions than it is to depart from them.

In the field of railroading and interstate commerce there are duties which can be performed by the federal government better than by the separate states, but this should not encourage the abandonment of local self-government, which from the beginning has been one of the greatest blessings of this country. The privilege of a community to regulate its own affairs is worth much, and this fact applies to the state as well as to the town, the county and the municipality.

As an illustration of the tendency to look to the federal government to attend to matters that properly come under state regulation, take the movement for nationwide prohibition. This is just now being pushed by many good men and women who have lost faith in the power of the states to regulate the liquor traffic in ways best adapted to conditions in the different states. It will probably be a long time before such a change is brought about, if it ever is, but the movement shows a growing tendency to seek control from the outside rather than government of, by and for the people at home. In line with this move for nationwide prohibition of the liquor traffic is the statement of a so-called expert on the cure of the drug habit that any law to effectually suppress the drug evil must be enacted and enforced by the national government, the states being unable to grapple successfully with this problem.

Conditions vary in different parts of the country as they do in different communities, and the states and their various subdivisions should be able to regulate their own affairs better than any one else, not excepting the federal government. So far as the rights, duties and privileges of the states are transferred to the nation so far does local self-government cease. And local self-government should be the last thing that the people of the United States should surrender.

A Springfield, Mass., man and his wife will start in November on a rowboat trip from Savannah, Ga., down the coast, through the Panama canal and up the Pacific coast to Seattle. There was a time when such exploits attracted wide attention, but the minds of the people today are filled with more important matters, and few will care whether the trip is a success or a failure. A book on the subject would not be a "best seller."

The fact that the late Lillian Nordica earned from $50,000 to $60,000 a year by singing should not encourage every girl who can entertain a parlor full of friends with her voice to try to become a Lillian, neither should the probability of ever attaining such a height in the realm of music discourage those who have the music in them. There is a reputation and a good living in figures far smaller than those of Nordica.

An automobile load of liquor was seized the other day at Portland, Me., which was believed to have been sent from Boston. The stock was pronounced "high-grade goods," notwithstanding the fact that such are rarely handled in prohibition states. How long before the flying machine will be "requisitioned" for the transportation of liquid contraband?

It is said there were 33 "actual farmers" in the public markets of New York the other day with loads of produce direct from their farms, and this is held up as an indication of the success of public markets in bringing down the cost of living. But how far would the produce of 33 farms go toward feeding the city of New York?

All of the candidates of all of the parties are confident of success, so far as can be judged from their statements. In a few weeks it will be plain that some of them were men of mighty poor judgment or were putting up a bluff for effect on voters whose chief desire is to be on the winning side.

The I. W. W. leaders of the great strike at Lawrence, Mass., in 1912, have been ordered by a justice of the supreme court of the state to return $15,000 to the court within ten days. Perhaps they will.

The department of agriculture reports that prices paid to producers of meat animals decreased slightly in August, but it is to be noticed that the effect has not yet got around to the retail markets.

THE BELOVED ADVENTURER

CHAPTER II.

An Untarnished Shield, Henry, Lord Cecil, eighteenth Earl of Swarthmore, frowned with annoyance as he re-read the note from Lord Weston which had arrived in the morning's post. The labored casualness of the communication was to him strong evidence that the matter was serious.

"My dear chap," the missive ran, "haven't you had enough of Croftleigh for a while? Do run up to town for a day or so at least, just so that I may get a little relief from the lovely ladies who torment me with inquiries about you when I want them to at least pretend an interest in me. Several shows that are not at all bad. By the way, for a youngster, Rodney seems to be doing wonderful execution. It is the talk of the club, the manner in which Mike Dazia, of the Cavety, has taken him up. But this is probably no news to you. Better run up and bring back the smiles to the fair faces of Lady P. and the Duchess of B—."

"It isn't like Weston to gossip, you know," Cecil commented aloud, and took a restless turn about the old library. "The boy must be getting in no end of a mess, by Jove!" he added decisively. "Mike Dazia is using him, and I'd give something to know for what. Just what use to her could he be?"

A half-hour's pondering brought no solution, and with a gesture of impatience, Lord Cecil pulled the bell cord. A few moments later his faithful and exemplary man, James, responded.

"You may pack—for town, James," Lord Cecil informed him. "We will catch the morning mail at Pernduff."

"Very good, my lord," the man responded, and disappeared.

Cecil lit a cigarette, and resumed his unsatisfactory speculations.

The possibilities suggested by Lord Weston's communication were, in truth, disturbing. Mike Dazia was a person of international reputation, concerning who much was known, but much more unknown. Of only ordinary beauty, with an inconsequential voice, and indifferent ability as a dancer, she nevertheless had in the brief years since she emerged from unguessed obscurity to blaze a rocket-like course across the skies of Europe, set a half dozen capitals by the ears, and was just now the particular sensation of London. Russian Grand Dukes, German princelings, French savants and Crookes from the West had laid at her feet homage and treasures, and she had smiled upon all alike, and shown favor to none above another, taking greedily with both hands all that was offered, and sometimes that which had not been offered. It was entirely out of character for Mike Dazia to single out, from the numbers of rank and wealth, who claimed for recognition, a youthful soldier with an allowance not equalling in a year what any one of a score of her slaves would spend on "hauveurs" for a dinner graced by her presence.

Besides Lord Cecil, his younger brother, Rodney, less than a year out of Sandhurst and now on duty, while awaiting assignment to a line regiment, as aide de camp at the war office, was the only surviving member of his ancient line. An orphan since childhood, Rodney had been in Cecil's eyes more a son than a younger brother, and there had been lavished upon him an affection quite equal to that ever given by a father. The family fortune had dwindled sadly in late generations, but this was a matter which gave Cecil small concern except that it necessitated making the allowance granted the young soldier very modest indeed. Besides boyish good looks and likeable manners, there was nothing about Rodney to attract attention—and these were not qualities which could be assumed to particularly interest Mike Dazia.

But Rodney was troubled with no such reflections. With the superb egotism of youth he accepted his favoritism at the actress's court, and ever demanded more. It was his first affair, and under the spell of her perfect arts he had already become fairly mad with desire for complete possession of this woman, who gave a little, and then fled, laughing and alluring, from his burning lips and hungry arms.

"Corinna! You will drive me insane!" he cried wildly, when, once again, she allowed him for an instant to think that she had at last surrendered to his caresses, and then danced

Airship Depends on Water Ship To Reach Scene of Big Conflict

Aeroplanes of various types have played important roles during the present war. All nations use them for scouting, and they have also been used for offensive purposes. away with mocking laughter. He covered his white face with shaking hands.

"I will put an end to it!" he suddenly swore. "I will not stand this torture. Happen what may after, no hell could equal this!"

Corinna noted with the coolness of a chemist who allows his compound to boil to within a split second of the explosive point that the boy had ceased to tremble, and that into his voice had come a note of reckless desperation.

"It is enough," she thought, "the young fool will be killing himself on my rug in a few minutes, and that would be inconvenient."

Hastily she crossed the room, and with caressing hands raised his face so that he might look into her glowing eyes.

"Almost I believe that you do love me," she whispered, "and yet—words are easy to say, and I have seen upon the stage as convincing agonies. I would you could prove it to me," she added softly, and in her glance was a world of promise.

"I will prove it—what proof do you demand?" the boy asked, with the light of hope returning to his face.

Corinna appeared to ponder deeply, then clasped her hands with delight.

"I will make it not hard for you—oh, a little thing!" she said. "Listen."

Among the jewels which, my good friends have given me, there is no black pearl—and I do so desire a black pearl! This, then, is a task for you, such as ladies of old set for their knights—bring me tomorrow the black pearl called 'Night Rose,' which old von Hagen is known to have, and you shall know happiness such as kings have sought in vain—fall, and never more shall that floor be opened to you. I believe you will not fail, and you may kiss me once as earnest of what will be."

From that clinging kiss the boy drew away giddy with the mad leap of his blood.

"I will get the pearl," he muttered, and stumbled from the room. Corinna yawned, crossed the apartment, and threw aside a heavy curtain.

"I think my part is done, Baron Stronverg," she said.

"And very well done, my child," Stronverg said admiringly. "He will go directly to von Hagen's shop, you think?"

"Undoubtedly."

"Then I had best follow," the Baron said, and gathered up his hat and cane. For some moments he paused, and eyed Corinna hungrily.

"When all this is done, I also shall have something of love to say," he told her, and took his departure.

Although it was well past midnight the actress's luxurious apartment, he proceeded directly to the quaint little shop of the jeweler collector, von Hagen. He was quite without plans, and to his excited mind it did not occur that a black pearl of sufficient consequence to be given a name would represent a fortune.

A light burned in the jeweler's shop, and the old man did not appear to regard it as strange that a customer should choose such an hour for a call. He merely looked up inquiringly from the tray of unset stones which he was examining.

"You have a black pearl," called 'Night Rose?' Rodney demanded.

The jeweler nodded.

"I have that pearl, and it is for sale. Its price is twenty thousand pounds," he said indifferently.

For a moment the boy was stricken dumb. So, she had made a jest of him as well might she have told him to bring the very Crown to purchase this pearl—would strain the resources of the minored family estate, and alone his scanty allowance. And she—shown this, and had said "bring it to me!" As she knew he could not purchase it, had she meant—?

With subconscious caution Rodney glanced through the window at the deserted street. The man was old—a swift leap—

As though reading his thoughts before they were even shaped into concrete form, von Hagen slightly shifted his position, and Rodney saw that in his hand was a heavy automatic revolver.

"I bid you good evening, sir," the jeweler said quietly. "Should you decide to purchase the pearl, I will be pleased to sell it to you—the price, as I said, is twenty thousand pounds."

Without a word Rodney hurried out into the night, and, needless of direction, rushed away. He took no note of a form which detached itself from the shadows and followed with silent swiftness.

Presently the boy became aware of the fact that he was passing along the Embankment, which was silent and deserted. He came to a stand, and gloomily eyed the great river, which seemed to slip furtively along as though to steal unawares under the arches of old London Bridge, the lights of which were like a string of low-hung stars. Rodney laughed wildly.

"Why not?" he said bitterly, and with steady steps moved toward the water. As he paused upon the brink, a hand fell lightly upon his shoulder, and he wheeled to look into the face of a stranger.

"Your pardon, sir," the man said courteously, "but you are young, and youth is prone to ill-considered haste. Perhaps, some little thing has loomed large in your eyes. So often it is only a matter of money. Would I were to pit you to more desirable if I were to pit into your hands twenty thousand pounds?"

"You mock me, sir," Rodney said with a touch of dignity. "It will become you to make a jest of one whom fortune has brought to a bitter pass."

Baron Stronverg raised a protesting hand.

"I do not jest," he replied quietly, and from his pocket produced a thick packet, which he offered for inspection.

"Here," he continued, "are Bank of England notes to the amount of twenty thousand pounds. They are yours for a trifling service. Give me your word that you will perform this service, and you may retain the notes in your possession, giving your further word that you will not spend the money until the time Rodney rushed impulsively from service has been accomplished, which will be this morning—the dawn is now breaking."

The bank notes were crushed in Rodney's grasp, and his heart was pounding so fiercely as to prevent speech. This handful of paper meant life, life, delicious with triumphant love! No more could he have given up this strangely acquired wealth—the price of the "Night Rose"—than could a desert wanderer, dying of thirst, put aside untasted a brimming cup of sparkling water. Even before he knew the service to be paid, he had in his heart agreed thereto.

"What is it you would have me do?" he at length muttered.

"Only this," the stranger said softly. "As aide on duty at the War Office, you may pass unquestioned into the private office of the Chief of Intelligence. There is on his desk a wicker basket. Tomorrow morning a clerk will from time to time place in this basket packets of papers, for consideration by the Chief, who invariably arrives at his desk a minute or two after ten o'clock. At exactly one minute to ten, there will be placed in the basket a sealed packet. This packet you will bring to me, unopened."

"What will this packet contain?" Rodney whispered, but in his soul he knew that no matter what the contents, he would secure it.

"That I can not say, and you need never know," the stranger told him. "Will you bring it to me, or will you give me back my notes?"

Rodney's clutch upon the notes tightened convulsively.

"I will bring it," he muttered.

"Where?"

"The hours that followed were passed by Rodney in a feverish and tormenting eagerness. When he had changed to his uniform, there was nothing to do but wait, and until nine-thirty he tramped the streets, unfamiliar as a foreign city with their early morning bustle of tradesmen and servants. He shut from his mind, with a panic of fear, the thought of what he was to do, and concentrated his thoughts upon what the reward would be.

At a quarter to ten he entered the War Office building, and made his way to the wing occupied by the Division of Intelligence, where, in the private office of the Chief he waited. From time to time a clerk entered, and without appearing to observe the officer, placed packets of papers in the basket on the desk.

At length the clock upon the wall indicated one minute to ten. Rodney's heart seemed to pause, and a cold dampness broke out on his forehead. The clerk again entered the room, and with a scarcely discernible emphasis of action placed in the basket a packet, wrapped in brown paper and closed with tape and wax seals. A moment later he had left Rodney alone.

With a gasp the boy stepped swiftly forward, slipped the packet inside his tunic, and hurried out.

Unmolested and apparently unmolested, Rodney quit the building, and made his way to the address given by the mysterious stranger. The man received him in silence, but held out his hand, an eager gleam in his eyes. Silently Rodney placed in his grasp the sealed packet, and fled.

The old jeweler, von Hagen, looked up without surprise as Rodney entered his shabby shop, and placed upon the counter a small box.

"Here is the pearl—give me the money," he said, and the exchange was quickly accomplished.

Pushed with triumph, Rodney presently burst into Mike Dazia's drawing room, and with sparkling glance the actress swept forward to meet him.

"You have brought me it!" she cried, and broke into gurgles of delight as he placed the precious thing in her palm.

"I can not stay—I am on duty—I must go," Rodney stammered, not daring to follow his impulse to crush her in his arms.

"Go now, but come tonight and demand what you will," she said softly, and the boy rushed away.

As the door closed behind him, Corinna's manner changed swiftly. She glanced at the great pearl with quiet satisfaction, then moving briskly to an inner room spoke sharply.

"Do not take time to pack the remainder of the things," she ordered, and the intelligent-faced maid nodded understandingly. "We leave on the instant."

Suddenly Corinna laughed.

"Fancy the sensation!" she exclaimed. "Can you not see the newspapers and the posters on the board—" ings—"Mysterious disappearance of world famous actress!"—"Mike Dazia vanishes!" It is a pity," she added regretfully, "for the world of fools has really thought me a great actress, and I must give up much. But, after all, the game has paid well."

Upon Cecil's arrival in town, he made his way directly to the War Office, knowing that at this hour his brother should be on duty there. He was filled with an unaccountable foreboding which he was impatient to set at rest by seeing the boy, and proceeded at once to the Intelligence Division. General Sir John Harvey, the famous old soldier who had been his father's friend and who was now the head of this important office, greeted him with grave kindness.

"I am glad you are here, Henry," he said slowly. "I have just sent to Croftleigh a wire begging you to come."

"You were my father's friend, and are mine, Sir John—speak plainly," Cecil replied quietly, but his heart was in the grip of a numbing horror.

The General suddenly raised his eyes and spoke with rapid terseness.

"One hour ago," he said, "there was stolen from this desk a sealed packet containing plans of the secret harbor defenses—the submarine mine maps—of every gateway to England. The man who placed that packet in the hands of the enemy has laid open to invasion, should the navy but be drawn away, the very heart of his country."

"This packet—it has not been recovered," Lord Cecil's white lips whispered.

"It has not, nor will it be. England does not guard her secrets so poorly that the plot of foreign spies, the connivance of a clerk, and the treachery of a subaltern may violate them. The stolen plans are false, and if acted upon will prove a deadly snare, but this is known to you and me alone."

"The old soldier pondered sadly. "We are in a calm that is the forerunner of the hurricane, Lord Cecil," he said. "God knows when the storm will break! It is not expedient that any official notice be taken of this thing—the spies shall leave England unmolested—the clerk shall go his way with the purchase price—none but those who will shut the secret in their hearts will know that an officer of the King has been a traitor, no less base because the effect of his act is discounted. So far as he is concerned it is the same as though the country he had sworn to serve lay in smoking ruins under the bloody heel of the enemy. My Lord Cecil, that man is your brother, and the honor of your house is in your keeping."

Lord Cecil bowed gravely.

"Sir John, I thank you," he said. "At this moment Rodney entered the room, and a quick smile of pleasure lighted his face at sight of his elder brother. Sir John glanced at the young officer with expressionless eyes.

"Lieutenant Cecil," he said quietly, "you will at once proceed to Croftleigh Manor, remaining there until further orders. My Lord Cecil, I bid you good morning."

"Come," Lord Cecil said, and followed by his bewildered and rebellious brother left the room.

Five hours later the brothers sat in the old library at Croftleigh. Apparently unmolested, Lord Cecil rested unwavering eyes upon the stricken white face of the boy, and heard to the end the broken flood of agonized confession and repentance that poured from his lips. When the other had sobbed himself to silence he spoke gravely.

"While in my keeping is the honor of this house, no slain may dim its untarnished shield," he said, and the boy slowly raised his head, while the pride and courage of a noble race fought to banish the weakness and cowardice that had so strangely usurped their place. At length he spoke, and his voice was firm.

"I now remember that in my keeping also is that honor, my brother," he said.

Slowly Lord Cecil took from its drawer and placed upon the table a heavy revolver of dull blue steel, and without another word walked slowly from the room.

In the famous old rose garden, the first plants for which had been brought from the far Holy Land by that ancestor who rode by the side of Richard of the Lion's Heart, Lord Cecil, last of his ancient line, stood and stared unseeing at the full blown blossoms, while lines as of age, etched themselves swiftly upon his white face.

"And oh, how I loved him!" he whispered, and the words seemed to echo, as they would through long years, in his empty, aching heart.

FURS

Some one has said that furs make a plain woman beautiful and a beautiful woman ravishing. That may be a bit of poetic extravagance, but there is no question but furs enhance the costume and add to the beauty of the face.

The average woman does not buy furs as she does a new hat—with the thought that if it is not satisfactory she can easily get another. She buys them after careful consideration and selection, because it means a large expenditure of money and, therefore, must be made to last several seasons.

It is also true that the average woman does not know very much concerning fur value. It is, therefore, necessary that she buy from only reliable fur dealers. In the advertising columns of this paper are to be seen the announcements of fur sales by reliable merchants in almost every edition.

FIFTY RIDES FOR FIFTY DOLLARS

Boston and Maine Establishes New Rate for Tickets.

The Boston and Maine railroad has filed with the public service commission tariffs to take effect on November 1, canceling all 5, 10, 12 and 100 ride fares, and establishing new rates for fifty ride tickets on a uniform basis of 2 cents a mile, equivalent to one dollar a mile for fifty rides. Thus from Concord to Boston, 74 miles, the rate is $74; Manchester to Boston, 56 miles, $56; Nashua to Boston, 39 miles, $39; Dover to Boston, 68 miles, $68; Exeter to Boston, 52 miles, $52; Portsmouth to Boston, 57 miles, $57; Rochester to Boston, 77 miles, $77.

The tariffs are applicable over the entire system, upon both interstate and intrastate traffic, except that 12 and 15 ride workingmen's tickets are still be sold in Massachusetts, under the requirements of status of that state.

Get a 10-cent box.

Put ashle—just once—the Salts, Pills, Castor Oil or Purgative Waters which merely force a passageway through the bowels, but do not thoroughly cleanse, freshen and purify these drainage organs, and have no effect whatever upon the liver and stomach.

The Great Efficiency Car

(Engine and vehicle patented July 2, 1903)
FRANKLIN SIX-THIRTY FIVE-PASSENGER TOURING CAR.
$2150. 2750 pounds. 4 1/2 in. tires.

VINCENT ASTOR BUYS ANOTHER FRANKLIN

This makes seven Franklins that Vincent Astor and his father, the late Colonel John Jacob Astor, have owned. In placing his order for this fast car, Vincent Astor stated that the last Franklin he has been driving he has driven twice as much as any other car that he has owned. He has gotten an average of ten thousand miles on his tires and has never had any tire trouble on the road with the car in four years he has owned it. Likewise, in that time, the car has never left for a destination but what it has returned without trouble of any kind. Mr. Astor owns and has owned many different makes of foreign and American automobiles.

THE GASOLINE ECONOMY

of the Franklin car was thoroughly established when 94 different stock Six-Thirty cars under official observation made an average of 32.8 miles on one gallon of gasoline on May 1, 1914.

THE COMFORT

of the Franklin is well known and easy to understand because of the four full elliptic springs, wood pill, small unsprung weight, and great flexibility.

FRANKLIN TIRE ECONOMY

is a byword. 34x3 1/2 in. high efficiency tires (Goodrich Silvertown Cord or Goodyear Power Saver) carrying a weight of only 2750 lbs. is self explanatory.

MORE MONEY AT HOME.

Biddeford Players Just Got By on Thirty Dollars.

"I think it would mean more money for Biddeford High to play all games as far as possible at home," said an interested supporter of the team this morning. "The boys got $30 for going to Portsmouth, N. H., Saturday, and after the expenses of the fifteen men taken on the trip were paid, there was not one cent left. I honestly believe that if a decent gridiron can be secured in this city, and Biddeford High should arrange home games, that they would prove a success financially, as the interest of the local school team is increasing every day."—Biddeford Journal.

NO HAGUE CONFERENCE

The announcement of our State Department that there will be no international peace conference next year, will surprise no one. A gathering at The Hague under present circumstances would be a burlesque on all previous peace meetings. The representatives of the warring nations would not speak to each other. Instead of sending peace advocates, every nation would bring a peace or at war, would dispatch a grievance committee. The air would be hot with the destruction of neutral ships and the thud of dum-dum bullets. When the next Hague Conference is finally called, it should be different in every way from the assemblages of the past. The discussion of rules of "civilized warfare" has taken up most of the time of meetings at The Hague. This discussion should be ended. It has failed absolutely. The nature of war has not been changed one little. Instead, it is more terrible than ever before. Nothing can make war something other than war. The hope of humanity lies in preserving peace. All of the energy of future Hague conferences should be directed to this one end.

HARRY THAW IN WINTER HOME

Longs to Be Back in Pittsburgh.

Harry K. Thaw is now a resident of Manchester. He arrived in that city shortly after noon yesterday, and took up his residence in the Clement house, 2146 Elm street. Accompanying Thaw was Sheriff Holman Drew of Coos County, in whose custody he is. Special officer Stevens of Concord and Mr. Thaw's secretary, Mr. Ries. These men, together with a cook and one or two servants, will constitute the household that will be maintained as long as Mr. Thaw stays in Manchester. "My only reason for coming to Manchester," said Thaw, in a brief discussion of his plans "was because I could not get a suitable house in Concord, or one that would hold us all conveniently."

"I do not know how long I shall stay," he continued with a smile. "The duration of my visit is not up to me, but we propose to be as comfortable as we reasonably can while here. The only irritating thing about it is that I have to stay here or anywhere else except in my mother's house at Pittsburgh. I expect that my family will visit me during the winter, but have no definite plans about them any more than I can have about anything else under the circumstances."

Operator Person came to the station a year or so ago from the U. S. S. Rhode Island and will leave this branch of Uncle Sam's service with a most excellent record. He has never been found wanting in his line of duty and in his departure he takes with him the best of good wishes from his associates at the key and the many friends and acquaintances which he made at the navy yard and in this city.

GOOD WORK ON STATE HIGHWAYS

Superintendent Hooker Gives Statement Up to Date.

Superintendent of State Highways S. P. Hooker states that during the present summer and fall months, very satisfactory progress had been made upon the highways of the state and especially upon the various trunk lines.

The East Side road is completed; the Merrimack Valley road has been flushed with the bare exception of a portion near Laconia and on the West Side road there is considerable to be taken care of, enough probably to occupy the attention of the department during the coming summer.

On the cross-country road from the Connecticut river, the line from Manchester to Portsmouth has been six-tenths completed, while the road as a whole has been four-tenths completed.

On the other country road connecting the East Side road with the Merrimack Valley road at Meredith, work is being done in every town, and generally excellent progress has been made.

ARREST SNEAK THIEF.

Stole Clothing on Penhallow Street.

The police got word on Monday evening that a man was about the city attempting to dispose of a commission set which had evidently been stolen from some home. While on the hunt for the man, they got another report that the residence of Andrew Callaghan on Penhallow street had been entered and several articles including a ladies' coat and two suits of men's clothing had been stolen.

The officers later arrested Arthur Jones, who they claim entered the home of Callaghan by means of a key, and disposed of the stolen property at a Market street pawn shop, which was later recovered. Jones at first gave his address as Portsmouth, but later changed it to Boston. He would admit nothing, but the police appear to have a clear case against him and believe that he is an experienced sneak thief. He will be heard in the district court this afternoon. Another man named Hope, who was arrested with Jones was later released as the officers could not in any way connect him with the case. The officers have been unable to find out where he got the commission set and what he did with it before his arrest.

There are still a few people in the picture houses, who, near the conclusion of the last film, before intermission leave the hall and create much disturbance. It should be stopped. There is sufficient time during intermission.

CITY NEWS

Many of the local fishermen who make a living mostly by handling lobsters believe that the law should be changed on the shell fish. They are of the opinion that the law prohibiting the catching of all lobsters from November 1 to May 1 would clear up most of the trouble over short ones as there would be plenty of large lobsters for all when the season opened, and it would not be necessary to handle the shorts. Law or no law, a lobster is a lobster to some people, and the matter is a hard proposition for the fish and game authorities to cope with.

Horace Thompson and family of State street left today for Winton, Cal., where they will make their future home. Mr. Thompson has been a resident of this city for twenty years and he leaves Portsmouth to better himself. He will join his brother on the west coast and engage in farming.

A man connected with the navy department at Washington, who is at present on business in this city, does not hesitate to state that the Portsmouth navy yard is to become an important station of the government.

The department, he says is watching Portsmouth all the time, and that Secretary Daniels is decidedly pleased at the way the business of the yard is conducted, especially the honesty and sincerity with which the officials and civilian hands enter into all transactions. The department heads at Washington say that everything at Portsmouth is done on the square.

Every estimate for work to be done is always close to the figures submitted; every bid made for building is a credit to the station, and the work performed in every part of the yard is the best. When the department is seeking valuable information relative to the Portsmouth yard, the Washington officials say that such information is given honestly, correctly and apparently with no axe to grind. Political influence has not hampered the department the same as other yards, and the Secretary believes that when Portsmouth fights for work, the fight is conducted on the merits of the station. Mr. Daniels has promised to help Portsmouth and all indications point to the fact that he is doing as he agreed.

Rev. Edward H. Macy and niece Miss Ruth of Laconia, are passing a few days in town the guests of Mr. and Mrs. Samuel Wendell of Wood-kawn avenue.
